

CRIMINAL JUSTICE AND CRIMINOLOGY (MA)

The Master of Arts in Criminal Justice and Criminology provides students with a cutting edge education that will prepare them to assume leadership roles in criminal justice and related agencies as well as to pursue more advanced educational opportunities.

Curriculum

The Master of Arts in Criminology and Criminal Justice requires 30 credit hours of coursework, consisting of four required courses, five elective courses, and a culminating experience. In order to demonstrate cumulative proficiency, students are required to either pass Applied Research in Criminal Justice & Criminology or complete a thesis. By default, all students are placed in the non-thesis option unless they select and are approved for the thesis option. Students who began the program prior to Fall 2022 have the option of taking the Comprehensive Exam, and may speak with the Graduate Program Director for more information.

* Student must earn a grade of B or better in order to graduate (a B- or below will not fulfill this requirement), and class must be repeated if grade below a B is earned.

² Students choosing the thesis track will complete a research thesis and take CJC 501 Thesis Research, while students who choose a non-thesis option will complete a major research/policy paper and take CJC 408 Applied Research in Criminal Justice and Criminology.

All PhD students and students in thesis-based Master's degree programs must successfully complete UNIV 370 Responsible Conduct in Research and Scholarship or other approved coursework in responsible conduct of research as part of the degree requirements. It is strongly recommended that students complete this two-day training before beginning the dissertation/thesis stage of the program.

Thesis Option

Students who have aspirations to pursue research in their career, or pursue a PhD, should consider the thesis track. Optimally, students should complete CJC 403 during the fall semester of their first year in the graduate program. In order to be approved for the thesis option, students must receive permission from the Department of CJC's Graduate Committee. The following requirements must be met:

- Completion of CJC 403 (Program Evaluation and Research Methods) with a grade of A- or better (no exceptions);
- Submission of a class paper to demonstrate writing skills that are acceptable to the Department of CJC's Graduate Committee; and,
- Submission of a thesis approval form that provides a brief description of the proposed research question, the proposed methodology, and a detailed timeline.

Once a student has selected the thesis option, they will sign a written agreement acknowledging that they cannot switch back to the non-thesis option if it becomes too difficult or takes longer than anticipated.

Students will work with their thesis chairperson to complete an acceptable draft of their thesis proposal. The thesis proposal draft will consist of a detailed literature review, research questions or hypotheses, research design, analysis plan, and a discussion of the strengths and limitations of the proposed research.

If data collection involves human participants, students must follow all of the requirements established by Loyola's Institutional Review Board (IRB) for the Protection of Human Subjects. Students cannot submit an IRB application until their thesis proposal is officially approved.

Once the formal thesis proposal has been approved, students will then work towards the completion of the research and composition of the thesis. Once final draft is reviewed and approved by entire committee, the student will make a formal presentation (defense) of the thesis and submit it to a publicly available database per Graduate School policies.
