

INTERNATIONAL LAW AND PRACTICE CERTIFICATE

A legal education without borders

In a global economy, legal practice in all areas extends beyond national borders. In business and tax practice, legal concerns are inherently international. International considerations affect every area of law, from criminal law to estate planning to child and family issues. In your legal studies, your increased ability to respond to the challenges of an international legal environment can only enhance your career.

The school's curriculum, in Chicago and abroad, continually expands and deepens to respond to developing areas of professional interest to include courses in international trade, dispute resolution, and the rule of law. Electives focus on important issues such as human rights, access to medicine, and issues of war, peace, and terrorism.

Curriculum

To earn a JD Certificate in International Law and Practice, you must complete 14 credit hours, including the three required courses and several electives, with an average grade of B or better. At least 11 hours must be graded credits.
